Evidently a great many of our fellows made a mistake and thought that next Tuesday, instead of last Tuesday, was election day.

The Republican party can stand the result if the country can. It is a defeat not merely for the party, but for the policy that has made the country great.

The Republican party is defeated, but its principles are not destroyed. They will command in other years the glad support of thousands who now deny them.

It is probable that the U. S. Senat has become Democratic. The people will now for the first time find out just exactly what Democratic principles are if such things exist.
